SAFE QUALITY FOOD (SQF): A GLOBAL STANDARD

Based upon the food safety principles and methods of HACCP (Hazard Analysis Critical Control Points), the SQF program is a GFSI (Global Food Safety Initiative) benchmarked certification standard. Widely applicable to nearly every stage of the food supply chain, SQF certification addresses not only farming and packhouses, but everything from food manufacturing to animal feed and pet food production.

Why is GFSI benchmarking so important?

Since 2000, GFSI recognition has been considered the gold standard for food safety certification. Developed in response to several high-profile recalls and negative publicity in the food industry, GFSI harmonizes food safety standards under one umbrella to reduce risk to both producer and consumer while also managing costs, developing competencies and capacity, and creating an international platform for collaboration, exchanging knowledge, and networking.

What are the advantages of SQF Certification?

- Assurance for both you and your customers that food is produced, prepped, and handled according to the most rigorous standards.
- Minimize risks and ensure your business's reputation is protected.
- Strengthen your brand; open doors to doing business with top retailers who expect stringent food safety and quality programs.
- Demonstrate your commitment to continual improvement of your programs.
